Model aviation museum celebrates summer with new artifacts and exhibits

Muncie, IN— The National Model Aviation Museum has completed the installation of several new exhibits, with new artifacts and hands-on platforms for museum visitors to enjoy. Many of the new pieces are on loan and will only be on display throughout the summer months.

National Model Aviation Museum granted full civilian museum certification

We are excited to announce that after a year of work the National Model Aviation Museum is now a recognized civilian museum with the National Museum of the United States Air Force. As such, the NMAMA is now eligible to receive items on loan. Already the museum has received and placed on display several Unmanned Air Vehicle systems (sUAS), including a Pointer, Raven and Batcam, as well as four wind tunnel models highlighting the use of wind tunnels in aircraft research and design.

First aeromodeling competition trophy now on display

The first trophy awarded for a national modeling competition is now on display at the National Model Aviation Museum. The Henry S. Villard Trophy is on loan to the AMA from the San Diego Air & Space Museum through September 2015 to commemorate the centennial of national model aviation competition.

New hands-on exhibit

Bring the kids to learn more about the principles of flight with our new hands-on exhibit, the Four Forces of Flight. The exhibit has been donated by The Challenger Learning Center, in Woodstock, IL.

Multirotors—“Drones”

Early multirotors, now commonly referred as drones, are featured in a new exhibit in the main gallery. On display is a hybrid helicopter/multirotor, as well as the first-known multirotor that was commercially sold, the Keyence Gyroscouter E-170, circa 1989, which was only sold in Japan.
